Southern vs. Northern Journals.

It has ever seemed to us very strange—passing strange—that the people of the South display such a perfect manin for periodicals like the New York Ledger, Harper's Weekly, Frank Leslie's ! Illustrated, and others of kindred ilk, and must confess, in universal demand, is made from the all earnestness, that it looks very little like that independence which should characterize a people, to say the least of it. It is true, we admit, that we of the South do not get up a and Fan Goods Dealers. March 28 ly that we of the South do not get up a style of literary journals so flashy and dazzling as the ones mentioned, but we thought that pride would have prevented us from ever allowing our passion—we can call it nothing else—to carry us so far as to "lick the foot that grouped us".

that spurned us."
During the late war in which we were engaged, these periodicals above spoken of were not sparing in their abuse of everything Southern and large and gaudy illustrations adorned their pages in display of the ignorance, barbarism and "complete worthlessness" of the people of the South. Penny-a-line writers found in their columns a source through which to give vent to their slang and which to give vent to their slang and vituperation against a people who possessed, in their eyes, not a single attribute of respectability. Our women—of whom any country might be justly proud—have been villified and slandered in their many "historical stories of the war," until, did one believe the "half of what was said," it would be thought there was not a lady South of Mason and Dixon's line, excepting the school-marms from Yankeedom, and a sufficient number of keedom, and a sufficient number of tories, out of whom to make heroines. Our soldiers—to whose gallant deeds and noble daring history will give her brightest page—were portrayed by these 'journals of civilization' as worse than robbers, cutthroats and demons. No enormities, no crime, was too great for them to commit. Davis, Lee, Johnston, and hosts of other pure patriots, were placed side by side with Benedict Ar-nold and John A. Murrell, because they were of and with the South.
We might continue the "string of slanders" which has been heaped apon the South by these fawning, a more proud and independent spirit: we had hoped that the Bonner's, Harper's and Leslie's had received their last dollar of Sonthern money, and that not another of their vile sheets would be allowed to cross the threshold of a Southern home -but, alasl

But we cannot see it now."

11757 While journals and periodicals published in the South languish and die for a sustaining patronage, the coffers of other enemies are filled to overflowing by the people who should be the last on coath to give the sustaining by the people who should be the last on earth to give them a cent.

Where is your pride? What has become of the memory of the past?
Have you forgotten the insults heaped upon your fallen heroes whose bones are scattered from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, by these same more who, now that the the Rio Grande, by these same men, who, now that the war is over, "bend the suppliant hinges of the knee, that the follow fawning;" having the suppliant hinges of the knee, that the supplies the suppliant hinges of the knee, that he had been supplied for immediately, at she supplied for immediately in the supplied for im made all the money they can from Northern fanatics by their wholesale abase and slander of the South, they would now rob you by flattery and the smile of the sycophant? Oh, how little of the old fire burns within which become and how small and dimensions. your bosom and how small and dim must be that spark of pride and resointion which sustained you through the perils and dangers of the recent revolution. Be men and women as of old, and show to the world that your proud spirits are yet uncrushed and unbroken, and that you will not give to such despicable wretches that which we will sen at manufactory prices. We offer to the public also us nentire Summer Stocket. and unbroken, and that you will not give to such despicable wretches that which gives them power and strength to destroy you. - Kosclusko Star.
